I am deeply moved and inspired hearing of the life of Aaron Swartz. Despite the great tragedy of the situation it seems many people have ~~been moved to~~ felt a renewed drive to do great work for the world.

There is always in man an element that rejects love. It's the element that wants to die. It's what asks to be forgiven.

Aaron inspires <sup>me</sup> ~~is~~ and also saddens <sup>me</sup> ~~is~~ ... What I learned this week was that I'm not alone, as Carl Malamud said, Aaron wasn't a lonesome wolf, so as such, I know now there MUST be other people I can connect with who ~~know~~ WANT to make media that actually promotes knowledge increase + help support and make the FUTURE Aarons WIN. In my life I've learned to make sorrows and sadness be the fuel to empower change. LIFE IS ABOUT NOW, WE MUST FIGHT to disrupt our current systems of gov't + EDU. in USA. R I P AARON S. we @you

All the love, admiration, and support in this room tonight existed the day Aaron took his own life. Someone who dedicated his life to letting people communicate with each other couldn't reach out to the people when he needed them. Don't make his mistake. None of us is in this alone.

I didn't know Aaron, but I know his brother Ben. After briefly hearing of me, Aaron reached out to help me get connected to his friends in positions to provide resources for my success in online streaming. I didn't think much of it then, but now I feel honored that he chose to spend his "up time" to advocate on behalf of someone he barely knew simply because he knew his positive impact on my life would be many times easier for him in comparison to the results. I wish I knew him.

Aaron was amazing. I met him at the Internet Archive at the first Open Library developer day. I write software for libraries, and Aaron's work made my career possible in many ways. I encountered Aaron again at EIFL, where he wrote the Guerrilla Open Access Manifesto. Bless you, Aaron, Thank you for everything.

I agree with Taren that most radicalize now. Something is so very very wrong that persons as idealistic, gifted, and altruistic as Aaron Swartz leave this world before they can realize the total of their potential. -- So very very wrong.

I am reminded of Iris Chang, who also left this world too soon.

THANK YOU FOR SHOWING US HOW TO CARE ABOUT SOMETHING MORE THAN OUR PAYCHECKS.
I JUST WISH IT HADN'T COME AT SUCH A GREAT COST. YOU ARE, ALWAYS WILL BE MY INSPIRATION. - VIVEK.
